As I told Nancy, this is a Paid Political Ad. My comment is as follows. I would use what David has so well said and then I would add. 'It is a paid political ad by this commissioner. It is the worst of public service to fear monger a very important public issue for expected personal benefit-in this case votes.' You can quote me.

Now that I've blown off some steam, you all handle how you all think is appropriate

Public engagement is very important to us. Our proposed plan was available for public comment for over 100 days and we received comments from residents in the area. Our proposed remedy benefited from our public engagement and resulted in a final plan for the cleanup of the site. In November, we held a public meeting near the site to answer questions about the cleanup plan and committed to hold a similar meeting in Galveston county.

David, We are going to report this. The suggestion is that folks in Galveston County were somehow not included in the commentary and deliberative process. Would EPA like to offer a response?

Galveston County Commissioners Court Unanimously Passes Resolution
Chastising The Environmental Protection Agency On San Jacinto Waste Pits
Decision

(League City, TX) – Galveston County Commissioner Ken Clark offered a county resolution calling out the Environmental Protection Agency for failing to inform local residents of the economic and environmental risk of their proposed San Jacinto Waste Pits, a federal Superfund clean-up. The resolution was unanimously passed by the Galveston County Commissioners Court.

‘It is outrageous that a bunch of Environmental Protection Agency bureaucrats in Washington, DC think they know what is best for Galveston County without having once conducted a public hearing to inform the residents as to the proposed remediation for the San Jacinto Waste Pits,’ stated Commissioner Clark.

The San Jacinto Waste Pits, originally created as a storage site for toxic sludge from paper mills, contains dioxin, a known carcinogen, and other toxic chemicals. The current plan submitted by the EPA calls for building a cofferdam and dredging the material, after removal of the temporary cap that has held the hazardous sludge in place through the flooding brought about with Hurricane Harvey.

Several local businesses and industry groups, including the Gulf Maritime Business Association, have called for the waste pits to be permanently capped. Removal by dredging the waste pits opens up the chance for toxic leaks that can severely harm the environment and ecosystems, thus disrupting economic opportunities.

The problem Commissioner Clark said, “Is that EPA bypassed working with Galveston County residents to find the best solutions - and that is unacceptable.”
